Opening 1 / 7

Hello, everybody. I married Danny's sister eleven years ago, which makes me the guy who has been the newest member of this family for over a decade. Danny, tonight that title finally passes to Alexis. Congratulations, Alexis. It comes with a folding chair at Thanksgiving.

Part 2 2 / 7

When I first started dating his sister, Danny was fifteen and took his job as her protector very seriously. He interviewed me on the porch. He had a clipboard. One of his questions was whether I could paddle a canoe, and I said yes, which was not true.

Part 3 3 / 7

So that summer he invited me on the family canoe trip. We tipped over twice in the first hour. The second time, Danny sat on the riverbank eating trail mix and grading my paddling out loud. I got a four out of ten. He said that was generous.

Part 4 4 / 7

Here is the thing, though. On the drive home he told me, 'You got back in after the second flip. That counts.' I have thought about that line for years. That is Danny: he tests you, and then he roots for you harder than anyone.

Part 5 5 / 7

Alexis, you passed his test much faster than I did. After your first family dinner he called you 'the real deal,' which from Danny is practically a poem. You laugh at his jokes, you argue with his opinions, and you never let him win at cards without a fight.

Part 6 6 / 7

Danny, welcome to the married side of the table. The rules are simple. Say yes to the canoe, and get back in after the flip.

Closing 7 / 7

Everyone, please raise a glass to Danny and Alexis. May your boat stay upright, and when it doesn't, may you climb back in together. Cheers.
