Opening 1 / 7

Good evening, everyone. I'm Andre, Caleb's older brother. I've known him for thirty-one years, longer than anyone here except our parents, and I plan to use that advantage carefully. Caleb, I promise to be kind. I've practiced.

Part 2 2 / 7

When Caleb moved into his first apartment, I drove the truck. It was six hours, one way, in July. Halfway there, the back tire went flat on a quiet stretch of highway, and the spare was flat too. I was ready to complain. Caleb just laughed, hopped out, and started walking toward the next exit to find help. Two hours later, he came back with a stranger, a pump, and a sandwich for me.

Part 3 3 / 7

That's Caleb. While I was busy being annoyed, he was busy being useful. He made a friend out of a man who was only trying to get home, and by the time we were rolling again, the two of them were swapping phone numbers. I'm not joking. I think they still text.

Part 4 4 / 7

Growing up, I used to think Caleb was the lucky one in our family. Things just seemed to work out for him. It took me years to see that it wasn't luck. He treats people well, and people treat him well back. He pays attention. He remembers your birthday, your coffee order, and the name of your dog.

Part 5 5 / 7

Hannah, you know this about him already. I saw it the first time he brought you home for dinner. He asked our mother about her garden before he sat down, and then he spent the whole night asking you questions too. He wasn't trying to impress anyone. He was just curious about you. He still is. I see it every time the two of you are in a room.

Closing 6 / 7

So here is my wish. Hannah, I hope you always have a spare tire when you need one, and I hope Caleb is the one who finds it. And Caleb, I hope you keep making friends of strangers, starting with the people at your table today.

Closing, continued 7 / 7

You two have already built something good. Caleb, we don't say this kind of thing to each other much, so I'm saying it now. I'm proud of you, and I'm glad you found Hannah. Please raise your glasses to Caleb and Hannah.