Opening 1 / 5

Good evening, everyone. I'm Daniel, and I have the honor of being Priya's stepfather. Welcome, and thank you for being here. It's a joy to host you all in this garden.

Part 2 2 / 5

I met Priya when she was twelve. For the first three weeks, she spoke to me only through the dog. Pass the salt, tell Daniel. I understood. I was the new person in her house, and she was protecting something precious. I didn't push. I kept showing up, and I kept my promises.

Part 3 3 / 5

One Saturday she asked me for help with a science project. It was a volcano, it was a mess, and it was the best afternoon I'd had in years. Baking soda went everywhere, including the ceiling. She laughed so hard she had to sit down. That was the day the dog finally got a break.

Part 4 4 / 5

I've never been called Dad, and I've never needed to be. At her graduation, Priya introduced me to her friends as, this is my Daniel. Two words. I carried them home like treasure. Being trusted by someone who had every reason to keep her distance is the greatest gift I've been given.

Morgan, you have been so kind to this family. You never made me feel like an extra chair at the table. Thank you for that, and welcome. Priya, I'm proud of the woman you've become. May your life together be full of volcanoes, the harmless kind. I love you both. Please raise your glasses to Priya and Morgan.
